

LEWIS CLOSES MINES, DEFYING THE
"NO-STRIKE" ORDER AND WARNINGS
OF DISASTER TO THE WAR EFFORT

New Work Stoppage Caused by Walk-Out of 540,000 Miners—Hope Expressed That Shut-Down Might Be Short-Lived in United Mine Workers' Willingness to Make "Any Necessary Sacrifice for Gov't"

WASHINGTON, June 21—(INS)—Mine chief John L. Lewis closed the nation's coal mines today with a third general walkout of 540,000 miners in defiance of the War Labor Board "No-Strike" orders and warnings of disaster to the war effort.

The new work stoppage, which had been presaged by the "wildcat" strikes of more than 70,000 disgruntled miners, became general at midnight last night when the back-to-work truce in the coal fields expired. Some miners had left the pits 48 hours before the deadline.

Official Washington saw a ray of hope that the shut-down of war-vital coal production might be short-lived, however, in the United Mine Workers' expressed willingness to make "any necessary sacrifice for the Government."

Lewis underscored this pledge with an offer to negotiate with Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes, Federal custodian of the Government-selved mines since May 1, but it came too late to keep the mines in operation today.

An immediate conference between Ickes and the hard-bargaining mine chief was anticipated with a view to working out an arrangement whereby the coal miners would work for the Government.

There was no hint of action, however, from President Roosevelt who has in his possession unsigned as yet the drastic Connally-Smith anti-strike bill. An irate Congress rushed through the legislation aimed at preventing strikes in Government-operated mines and plants after the June 1-5 walkout in the coal fields.

Military and production leaders took a grave view of the third stoppage of coal production within seven weeks. Under Secretary of War Patterson declared that it would prove "disastrous" to the war effort.

The Office of War Information said that the country's 1943 coal requirements—to heat homes next winter and provide uninterrupted operation of war plants—could not be met unless coal was mined at "full capacity every month."

In Pittsburgh, center of the nation's steel industry, industrial leaders were almost panicky. They said that coal supplies for the blast furnaces were at rock-bottom levels because of the two previous mine strikes.

DES MOINES, Ia. — (INS) — Twenty-two Buena Vista county anglers past 75 years old have bought fishing licenses this year, the Iowa State Conservation Commission said today. Dean of the anglers is A. F. Morse, 94, with J. J. Hughes, 83, the runnerup, Effie Endresen, 75, is the oldest woman to get a license in the county.

NEW YORK—(INS)—Science is but a means to further political aims in Nazi Germany.

An official Berlin University circular dated February 1st, 1943, says "National Socialism has directed German science toward a goal which is in harmony with the German national character. Wherever science attempts to deviate from this goal, it must be stopped and redirected towards this purpose."

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT
(Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

In Defense of Elmer
Washington, June 19.
WHETHER or not the Senate hears the House yesterday inflicted upon the OWI by abolishing its domestic unit, it should be made clear that that action was not because of Mr. Elmer Davis' recent Newspaper Guild speech. It would have come with that.

THE UNFORTUNATE pomposity of Mr. Davis, the character of the OWI product and the sound reasons for regarding its domestic activities as partisan, stupid and unnecessary to the war effort had combined for a long time to create the ill will which found expression in the devastating House vote. The critical comments of Mr. Davis

JOHNSVILLE, June 21—Eighteen year old Donald Harkness, of the final assembly department of Brewster Aeronautical Corporation's division, is reputed to be the youngest lead man in the aircraft industry.

Harkness began work on the night shift at Brewster's Newark, N. J., division and through initiative and long hours achieved his present position.

He gets few days off but whenever the occasion permits he spends his spare time building models of Brewster Bermuda and Buccaneer dive bombers and Corsair fighters.

BUCKS COUNTY TOWNS

Activities of Interest To All In The Various Communities
GLEANED BY SCRIBES

The Rev. John J. Sefton, former assistant rector of Our Lady of Mt. Carmel Church, Doylestown, has been presented with a purse of $450 by the parishioners in appreciation of his services for the past three years. A large number of the parishioners assembled last evening in the basement of the Church for the presentation.

The priest is being transferred to St. Alice's Church, Stonehurst.

The new assistant rector, Rev. John Campbell, and Rev. John Henry were introduced by Father Sefton. Both were ordained in May at St. Charles Seminary, Overbrook, and this is their first appointment.

The Rev. Campbell, who is from Summit Hill, will remain in Doylestown permanently, while Rev. Henry, who was formerly of Philadelphia, will go to the Catholic University in Washington, D. C., at the end of the summer.

The children of St. Bernard's School also presented Father Sefton with a gift of money amounting to $30 last week.

"What Will You Do About It?" was the subject upon which Howard H. Prouse, former pastor of Chalfont Methodist Church, spoke on the occasion of the 52nd annual commencement of the eighth grade pupils of the Horsham township schools held in the school auditorium, Thursday evening. Dr. Prouse now is principal of the Brown Preparatory School, Philadelphia.

During the evening 36 boys and girls completing the course were presented diplomas by C. D. Smith, president of the school board.

Presentation of a number of awards was also a feature of the exercises. Richard Kiebsamen, of the Horsham school, and Robert Taylor, of the Prospectville school, had charge of the presentation of the class gifts.

The Doylestown High junior "prom" held in the Armory was well attended and successful. The crowd was not quite as large as usual with so many of the alumni in the service or away for other reasons.

The climax of the evening came when Beverly Ingham, who was graduated Tuesday evening, was crowned queen of the "prom" by the senior class president, Wayne Anderson. The crown was a simple circle of tiny white flowers which were very effective against the queen's dark hair. She carried

Her Tale of Horror Practically Another "Guadalcanal Diary"

(Editor's note: This is the first of two chapters of another "Guadalcanal Diary" which might be sub-titled "Flight From Death." CHAPTER ONE
By Jack Mahon
AN ADVANCED BASE, South Pacific, June 21—(INS)—This is another "Guadalcanal Diary" which might be sub-titled "Flight From Death." It was written by a little lady of God, Sister Mary Theresa, Missionary of the Society of Mary.

We met this gallant little nun at a base to which she was transferred after her evacuation from Guadalcanal. Modest, kindly and reverent, she told her story to Father Frederick Gehring, C.M., heroic chaplain of Guadalcanal who assisted in her rescue. Told it softly, as if she were praying while she talked, for the holy members of her mission who have gone to their reward.

The Sister's story is a tale of courage, endurance and glorious, shining unselfishness and faith which carried this nun and her missionary colleagues through miles of treacherous jungle and bush country in a two month flight from the on-rushing barbarians of Japan.

We will not attempt to tell the story. No humble words of ours are worthy of it. You can't sell courage with superlatives.

After reading Sister Mary Theresa's diary we think you'll see why we didn't try.

In a preface Sister Mary Theresa explains the background of missionary work in the Solomons. She

CHEMISTS AIDING IN SAVING FARM CROPS

Perfect Lethal Brews At Rohm & Haas Plant To Offset Pests

COMPOSITIONS GIVEN

If U. S. farms this summer escape an insect scourge that not only would balk the necessary 30% increase in vegetable crops but might well cut our food supply far below normal years—we can thank American chemists for their foresight and determination.

For this summer the stage is set for an invasion of bean beetles, pea aphids, cabbage loopers, leaf hoppers, worms, soldier-bugs and weevils which can devastate far more than the billion dollars' worth of vegetable crops destroyed in normal years. The stage setting consists of a serious shortage of rotenone—the toxic ingredient in imported derris or cube root—which has held these vegetable destroyers in check for the past dozen years. This crucial war year finds us with less than half of our normal year's supply of this insect-killing ammunition—the rest of it being shut off by Jap battle fleets and German submarines.

Before the war, rotenone containing insect-killing rotenone were largely imported from the Far Pacific, though some rotenone-bearing roots came from Brazil and Peru. Now far eastern sources are shut off by war in the Pacific, and Axis submarines have cut South American imports to less than 3,000,000 pounds—although Brazil and Peru are harvesting the largest cube crop in their history despite labor shortages. In 1943, farm experts estimate we ought to have upwards of 6,000,000 pounds of rotenone if we are to get even "normal" harvests of cabbage, potatoes, beans, peas, turnips, cauliflower and other vegetables—so farmers are going to be 3,000,000 pounds short.

The picture would be black were it not for the fact that American chemists had started searching for a synthetic insecticide to equal the effectiveness of natural rotenone long before the war. A group of U. S. chemists began research on

A Ration Book Returned

(By "The Stroller")
Sure there are honest people still in the world.

And this goes to prove it.

A housewife out to do the marketing Friday afternoon lost her ration book. Her name and address was on the book.

Returning to her home she was certainly perplexed to find that she had left her book in a store where she had done the marketing.

What to do?

That was the question.

The family visioned living on rather a scanty menu for perhaps three months. "No, that book would never be returned," members of the family agreed. Some kind neighbors came to the rescue and contributed some of their stamps, which was surely a friendly and neighborly act.

Then Saturday the mailman came and what did he deliver but the ration book.

The name of the finder was not revealed to the owner but the return of the book certainly proves that there are honest people still in the world, despite all that one hears to the contrary.

ASKS PARENTS TO PROHIBIT RIFLES
TO THE CHILDREN

District Attorney Edw. G. Biester Warns of Danger During Vacation Time

APPEALS TO PARENTS

Constitute An Ever-Existent, Potential Danger

DOYLESTOWN, June 21 — With the termination of the school year in many schools already at hand, and with others to close this week, District Attorney Edward G. Biester, of Bucks County, today interviewed newspapermen and discussed the inherent danger of permitting children to carry small bore and air rifles.

His appeal is to Bucks county parents to be very careful during the next two vacation months.

"Such weapons are deadly weapons and in the hands of unaccompanied children, constitute an ever-existent potential danger," District Attorney Biester pointed out.

"It is obvious that in war times, stress is laid on weapons of war, and children along with the adults become inoculated with the war spirit. This is normal and natural but should result in increased vigilance on the part of the parents.

"Anyone who reads newspapers knows there is scarcely a day that passes in which some child somewhere is not injured because of the carelessness of parents in permitting a child to carry a rifle or in some instances permitting loaded firearms in the home to which the child has access.

"The charm of a rural county like Bucks and a community like Doylestown and others in the county is attributable to its small wild life. Numerous instances have been cited to me to the effect that our children have been shooting at squirrels and small birds, but as important as this may be, it is not nearly as important as the injury and possible loss of life that may result from permitting our children unaccompanied by adults to carry and use small bore and air rifles.

"In the view of many people, air rifles are not dangerous, but anyone who is familiar with the modern air rifle knows that a child may be injured for life by their careless use."

For the protection of the children of Bucks county, District Attorney Biester has made the following request:

"That parents do not permit their child to carry or use, except under supervision, either rifles or what we commonly call air rifles. I sincerely trust that the people of Doylestown and all of Bucks county will in the interest of their own children and the children of the various communities, comply with this request."

COPOLYMERIZE

Swinging into everyday usage in American speech along with synthetic rubber are several new words. One of them is a strange verb—copolymerize.

What it means is shown by following the process of making rubber in the new government plant in West Virginia which was built at a cost of $56,000,000 and which will have a peak capacity of 90,000 tons of rubber a year. That is as much rubber as could be supplied by 90,000 men working in an "orchard" of 24,000,000 rubber trees. The West Virginia plant is operated by 1,250 men.

There are three units to this plant, all of which have been placed in operation. The first unit receives alcohol in tank cars from Kentucky distilleries and converts it into butadiene. The second unit receives ethylene from a nearby oil refinery and converts it into styrene. The third unit receives a mixture of three parts butadiene and one part styrene with seven parts of soapy water to form a milky liquid latex. Small droplets of butadiene and styrene are formed.

Under heat and with the addition of a catalyst the droplets are stirred in glass-lined pressure vessels until they copolymerize (change) into solid rubber-like particles of Buna S. At this point unreacted butadiene and styrene are boiled off the latex and recovered for reuse. The latex, which is still in milky liquid form, is then pumped into a blending tank and mixed with other batches for the sake of uniformity.

Next, the rubber particles are brought together by adding salt and acid, causing coagulation. Curds formed by this process are screened and washed free of the other ingredients in the latex and submitted to a drying process consisting of squeezing to remove remaining water and then forcing through a warm air dryer.

The finished product—synthetic rubber—is then pressed into seventy-five pound bales.

NAZI OIL SHORTAGE

Some of the experts are saying that America's theoretical maximum war effort on the offensive side may be reduced as much as one-third because gasoline and lubricants will not be available in sufficient quantities.

To meet the situation the oil industry has been calling insistently for higher prices to finance exploration and increase production. The increase has not been forthcoming, perhaps because the materials for drilling are not available.

At any rate, the present wells are being pumped at as rapid a rate as is considered safe and new sources comprise the only domestic solution. In this situation the oil resources of the Middle East, largely under British control, may again become available for use in the Allied war effort. It is reported refinery equipment is being rushed to the area to be available when the Mediterranean is cleared for tankers.

Food experts say Americans have been eating whale meat and didn't know it. And horse?

ECHOES OF THE PAST

By Courier Staff Member

Review of the news as it appeared in the Bucks County Gazette issue dated at Bristol September 29, 1931. The Gazette, a weekly newspaper published in Bristol, was discontinued following its merger with the Courier.

On Sunday morning next, at the 8½ o'clock mass, nearly 100 children who have been attending preparatory instructions for the last six weeks will receive for the first time the Holy Sacrament of the Eucharist. At 3½ o'clock in the afternoon the same children will receive the sacrament of confirmation at the hands of the Right Rev. Dr. Shanahan, Bishop of Harrisburg, who takes the place of the venerable Arch-Bishop of Philadelphia, the latter being too ill to participate in any public services. After confirmation, a bell weighing 1,249 pounds, will be solemnly blessed by the same Right Rev. Prelate before being located in its final resting place, in the church tower.

Several weeks ago the fire committee of council advertised for proposals for the erection of a two-story brick building to be used as an engine house by Fire Company No. 2. In response four bids were received as follows: Frank N. Booz, $2,375; J. S. Wright, $2,800; F. P. Crichton, $2,700; Edmund Lawrence, $2,700. A special meeting of council was held last Tuesday evening to consider the proposals, and the contract was awarded to Edmund Lawrence, he being the lowest bidder for the house.

Joseph A. Martin has taken the large show case used at the Permanent Exhibition in Philadelphia by D. Landreth & Sons for display of their seeds to Atlanta, Ga., where he will erect and arrange it for their use at the Georgia State Fair.

Daniel E. Price of Falls Township has purchased the residence of Morton Wainwright, corner of Penn and Radcliffe streets, for the sum of $5,500.

Burlington County is the home of frogs, toads, snakes and other reptiles, and hundreds of other racing horses known to fame. Mount Holly fair will show many of them to the admiring gaze of thousands.

The borough council assembled in special session at the council chamber on last Thursday evening. The following members were present: William H. Grundy, president; L. A. Hugnet, William H. Booz, Michael Dougherty, Robert W. Holt, William J. Jones, James Wright, Charles E. Scheide, and C. W. Peirce. Daniel Muncey was chosen temporary clerk. Remarks were likewise made by Mr. Hugnet and in response to an invitation Charles S. Bailey, Esq., who was present, made a short address. The tributes paid to the lamented president (President Garfield) were very touching, and the proceedings of the meeting were marked by great solemnity. Upon motion of Mr. Booz, it was resolved that the minutes of the meeting be printed in circular form, and a copy sent to each house in the borough in order that the people might be informed of the action of council, and comply with the proclamation of the president by abstaining as far as possible from their usual business avocations.

On Thursday last, the hosiery mill of Thomas Hughes & Co. shut down and suspended work. Three hundred hands were employed who are thus thrown out of work. It is not known when the mill will again resume operations.

AMERICAN BRED by FRANKEN MELONEY

CHAPTER TWENTY-TWO

The telephone blared, and Christopher hurried to answer it. He knew it was long-distance by the peculiar urgency and excitement that country operators manage, remarkably, to inject into the bell.

"Wain speaking." He guarded his voice to keep from being heard in Ann's room. He was aware, at the same instant, of someone downstairs stepping cautiously from the dining room into the hall. That would be Barton. Christopher was tempted to call to him that there was an extension in the library. He was aware, too, of the creek of Helen's door. Ann's sister was evidently not above a little discreet eavesdropping, either.

"You sound sick," Miss Smith said at once. "Like you were speaking from under water with a frog in your throat."

Her female perspicacity irritated him. "You can hear me. Do you want me to yell and wake the whole house?"

"Oh, is there a house to wake? Well, you're supposed to be in the Federal Court this afternoon on the Jenkins case and I thought I'd remind you."

"Thanks," he replied.

"Also, Mrs. Wain was on the telephone most of yesterday, and she's already called this morning. She says she's got to talk to you, because she has a thousand things to settle about the puppy sweepstakes."

"You settle them for her," Christopher instructed. "You've gotten to know as much about the dog business as I have."

"And the law business?"

"You seem to know as much about that as I do, too. Thanks for the call."

He hung up. Footsteps, now casual, wandered back into the dining room and Helen's door closed almost noiselessly, and then opened again with ostentatious briskness.

"Good morning, Mr. Wain. I'd like to talk to you."

If there were American Grand Duchesses, Christopher decided, Helen would be one of them. To begin with, he had had a most difficult time getting in touch with her. Remembering Ann's forwarding address, he had tried Bar Harbor. Bar Harbor had put him on the trail to White Sulphur Springs and, although he hadn't got Helen, he had got a haughty person by the name of Arthur, who was stubbornly reluctant to tell a strange male voice where his, Arthur's wife, could be found in New York.

Eventually, however, Arthur said that Mrs. Huston could be reached at the Waldorf. Once reached, Helen had exploded right off, like a string of Chinese firecrackers, and it had taken him some time to convince her that Doctor Matheson, the Rivers' old family physician, was taking care of Ann, and that Emma Jeeves was helping.

The presence of Emma Jeeves seemed to be the one bright spot for Helen. If Emma were in the house it meant that her sister was being properly chaperoned. But even so, Helen lost no time in appearing on the scene, with one Tom Barton in tow. Christopher didn't know to this moment where Mr. Barton figured in the set-up, but he carried all the earmarks of an old family friend.

Helen's opening words seemed to bear out that conclusion. "Mr. Barton and I hate to inconvenience you in this way," she commenced, on a circuitous route.

"No inconvenience at all," Christopher returned politely.

"Oh, but it is an inconvenience. I would have had my sister moved immediately to a hospital on my arrival, but Dr. Matheson insisted that she stay here."

"Of course," it's her home, and you mustn't feel that it's an imposition of any kind."

"But surely Mrs. Wain must be inconvenienced?"

"Not at all," he assured her non-committally.

Helen was stumped. She wasn't getting anywhere. She made one last effort to establish the situation on a fitting basis of impropriety. "Nevertheless," she wound up, "you can appreciate how distressing this all is for Mr. Barton. When Dr. Matheson comes this morning, I shall have to make him see the good sense of getting Ann back to town at once. In the meantime"—Helen smiled as she swept toward the stairs—"thank you for everything you've tried to do."

Christopher looked after her, scratching his head. This was something else again. What did she mean, "distressing" for Mr. Barton? Who was this Mr. Barton?

He turned to the door of Ann's bedroom, and tapped lightly. The nurse slipped out.

"Oh, good morning, Mr. Wain. She's better; quite a lot better to do. Temperature's almost normal."

"That's wonderful. Any chance of my peeping in at her, do you think?"

"Dr. Matheson said she may have just one visitor if her fever went down."

"Oh," Christopher Wain knew enough. "Perhaps the one visitor means her sister?" he hazarded.

"Oh, no. Doctor Matheson said it would be better if Mrs. Huston did not see Miss Rivers for the time being."

Christopher commented with a disarming smile, "I dare say that leaves a clear field for me, doesn't it?"

Miss Drew smiled too, and opened the door wider. "Just for a minute or two, and don't let her talk too much."

Christopher walked in, enjoying the sense of having scored first on Mr. Thomas Barton.

"Well, you are looking better," he essayed, as matter-of-factly as he could.

"You mean I've looked worse than this?" she demanded. "Were people permitted to come around and stare at me?" she pursued in mock outrage.

"Oh, I just poked my head in now and again," he soothed. "You didn't really look so terrible. I mean you weren't dangerously ill."

"Oh, I wasn't, was I? Do you know what I had?"

He shrugged. "A touch of grippie."

"A touch of grippie nothing! I almost had pneumonia!" she sputtered indignantly. "I was at death's door. I'll have you know."

"Oh, stop boasting. There's no such thing as almost having pneumonia. You either have it or you haven't it. If you haven't it, it's grippie. And as for being at death's door"—He gave a snort. "You're talking too much."

"People with touches of grippie can talk as much as they like," Ann pointed.

Christopher turned on his heel. "Very well, good-bye. You just go on and talk to yourself."

"Wait a minute, please. I have something I want to get off my mind."

"What is it?"

"What did I do, or say, when I was out of my head?"

"You didn't open your mouth," he fibbed, "when I was around."

She looked up at him, wondering if he really thought he sounded convincing. She had a vague memory that he had picked her up in his arms out in the barn, that she had screamed like a schoolgirl, and acted like the heroine of a Victorian play. She had probably cried, "Unhand me, sir!"

And very distinctly Ann had a recollection of having had a lot to say about men who ran around so carefully concealing the fact that they were married to women called Brenda. She remembered having babbled, too, about reading Brenda's letter—or had she? At any rate, she felt horribly exposed as he stood beside the bed gazing down at her. What did he know, and what did he know she knew? The only thing to do was to find out.

"How did I get in here that night?" she asked, trying to sound casual.

"I carried you."

"Good Lord, did I faint?"

"No, you just wobbled."

"You have a way of painting such attractive pictures. And how did I get into this?" She gestured about the bed.

"You fell into it. It was one of those succinct, self-contained statements. 'Listen. You're talking entirely too much.' He glanced toward the door as if he wished the nurse would reappear and stop the conversation."

"So I just fell into bed!" Ann faced his gaze squarely. "Didn't I put up any argument, or anything?"

"Naturally. It's your middle name, Ann Argument Rivers."

She detected evasion in his rather heavy-handed repartee. "Please," she appealed to him seriously, "see this my way. After I'm up, there'll still be matters we'll have to talk over about the farm."

"I don't like to call you names when you're ill, so"—Ann noticed a little tightening of the lines about Christopher's eyes.—"No more gabbling. I might as well confess that there's someone downstairs who ought to be standing here in my place."

"You mean Helen! You 'phoned her? Why did you?"

"Well, weren't you at death's door?"

"No, I wasn't." Her tone was impatient. "I only had a touch of grippie. There was no need to call the whole militia!"

"The whole militia is right. Mr. Barton's here too."

"Oh," she slumped back on her pillows. "It's going to be a bore, but I'll see them."

"You can't," said Christopher smugly.

"Why not?"

"Because I'm seeing you. Doctor's orders that you were only to see one person."

A simple case slowly. "Well, if it was doctor's orders, I can't do anything about it, can I?"

He studied her. Somehow, that wasn't the right answer. "What is Tom Barton, anyway?" he demanded.

"A stock broker."

"I meant what is he to you?"

"Oh."

"Oh, what?"

"Well, Helen thinks he's engaged to me, and Tom thinks so too."

"And what do you think?"

"I don't know."

"What the blazes right have you got running around not knowing a thing like that?"

"It's something I don't want to talk about."

"It's something you've got to talk about."

So, now she knew. She could tell by the way he glared at her, that she'd given herself away completely in her delirium. There wasn't a doubt in the world that she'd shouted Brenda's name until the very heavens rang with it.

"I feel too weak for any more discussion," she said faintly.

He looked contrite. "Gosh, I could kick myself."

"So could I."

"Kick you, or kick me?"

"Both. Wait a minute, don't go—How's Rowdy?"

"Rowdy's fine. She sleeps in the hall outside your room every night. It's the only place we can keep her quiet."

"I want to see her."

"She's out in the kennel now, being fed."

"Hans should know that Rowdy's got to have cod-liver oil and calcium, and she won't eat carrots. She's very picky."

"Then Hans'll train her. She'll eat what she gets and like it."

Ann sat up. "She'll do nothing of the kind!"

"I thought you felt weak. Lie back there."

"But you don't understand. I'm showing her at the sweepstakes. I want her to beat Gretel."

A grin tugged at the corners of his lips. "That's nice!"

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

with the "newspaper boys" and at the same time score against an opponent.

EACH CANCELS the other out. Both are well understood by every newspaperman and neither is of importance. Of course, Mr. Davis is not a low creature, nor a Goebbels nor a Gaidy. On the contrary, while he is filled with a too deep consciousness of his own rectitude, he is devoid of any sinister purpose. It is possible to say that his personal manners could be improved, that his capacity as a public administrator is slight, that his sense of humor is feeble, that his judgment of men is poor and that he thinks more highly of himself than the facts justify. But efforts to depict him as an evil man are just ridiculous. He may be a bore, but he isn't bad.

CONSIDERING his type, Mr. Davis' attitude toward newspapermen is entirely natural. To one of his temperament it is natural to feel that the newspaper business suffered a great loss when he left it, and he is rather addicted to referring to the time when "I was a reporter myself," inferring that reporting was on a much higher level in those days. This is a delusion, but, while it does not greatly endear him to active reporters, it does no harm. He was made head of the OWI not because of his newspaper record but because as a radio commentator he had done a good job and made a national reputation.

BUT, THERE was another reason. Mr. Davis was also a New Dealer of the more advanced kind, a member of the radical American Labor party, an ardent third term and just as ardent for the fourth term. Without those qualifications he might have been much more gifted than he is and he would not have been given the chief propagandist job in this Administration. When first he came to Washington, Mr. Davis had a very good press. Correspondents and columnists alike were cordial up to the time of certain developments. One of these was that Mr. Davis' OWI was using the taxpayers' money to distribute literature which, in effect, was New Deal campaign material.

ANOTHER WAS that Mr. Davis' very expensive organization was full of friction and feuds and that Mr. Davis, himself, did not know a great deal about what was going on. When these things were pointed out in the press Mr. Davis aggressively proclaimed that all he was doing was giving the American people "full and accurate information." There was considerable documentary evidence to contradict this and his contention was not strengthened by his public reference to fourth-term talk as "hot air." In face of the facts, that was anything but "full and accurate." It was, in fact, extremely silly. Mr. Davis' reaction to press comment on these things was resentful and his speech defending the bureau chiefs and criticizing correspondents clearly was due to hurt feelings. But no one should be surprised at this. Criticism of the press is a major New Deal policy, and Mr. Davis' reaction in a small way is exactly Mr. Roosevelt's in a big way. No doubt Mr. Davis has been commended for his "attack" by the White House "inner circle," and probably it will be followed by others—which is all right.

LIKE HIS Chief, he conceives it his duty to point out the errors of the press and correct the correspondents who show this regrettable disposition to carp and cavil at great men. The correspondents do not mind. Some of them are amused over the efforts of a bungling bureaucrat to tell them how not to report his bungling. They just feel contempt. But few really care. They know that long after Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Davis and the rest of those who now strut upon the Washington stage have passed away, Washington correspondents still will be reporting to the country the facts about Presidents and public officials. They will be assailed by those whom they criticize and praised by the politicians who happen to be on the other side. And neither will make any difference whatsoever. If the time ever comes when any administration and its opposition are equally pleased with the press, then, indeed, newspapers and newspapermen will have degraded their profession and done the American people an injury. The ideal situation, which too seldom occurs, is the one where both political sides are equally resentful. Always, that is the most convincing evidence that newspapermen are measuring up to the highest standards and that the national interest is being really served by a free and independent press.

Miss Sophie Rice Becomes Bride of William B. Haken

HULMEVILLE, June 21—A student of the Philadelphia School of the Bible took as his bride at a ceremony in Neshaminy Methodist Church yesterday afternoon a young woman who is a graduate of that school.

The principals in the nuptial ceremony were Miss Sophie Rice, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Rice, of West Bristol, and Mr. William B. Haken, Philadelphia, son of Mr. and Mrs. William C. Haken, of Hershey.

The Rev. Frank Kates, of Neshaminy, officiated at the ceremony at 1:30 o'clock. Mr. Rice gave his daughter in marriage.

Music was provided for the occasion by Miss Clara L. Illick, organist; and Mr. Arthur McCarthy, Croydon, vocalist. The latter sang: "I Love You Truly," "Because," and "Saviour Like a Shepherd Lead Us."

Sisters of the bride and groom were attendants for the bride. They were Miss Doris Haken, of Hershey, who was maid of honor; and Miss Anna Rice, West Bristol, bridesmaid. The best man was Mr. Stephen Rice, Langhorne, a brother of the bride; and ushers included two other brothers of the former Miss Rice, they being Messrs. Basil Rice, South Langhorne, and Nicholas Rice, Trenton, N. J.

The bride's gown was fashioned of white marquisette. Lace panels extended from the shoulders to the hemline. Lace also was used for the yoke, and as an insert at the back of the waistline. Her fingertip veil was of net, with a border of lace. This was attached to a beaded tiara. White slippers were worn, and the former Miss Rice carried an arm bouquet of white roses and bridal wreath.

The maid of honor selected pink and the bridesmaid chose blue for the ceremony. These floor-length gowns were of stiff organza. Sweetheart hat effects, also of organza, matched the gowns. Each maid carried a mixed bouquet.

A reception followed at the Rice residence in West Bristol, after which Mr. Haken and bride left for a week's honeymoon. They will reside in Philadelphia. The bride is also a graduate of Langhorne-Middletown high school, and the groom graduated from a high school at Hershey.

FRANKLIN WINS IN YOUTH LEAGUE; THIRD WARD ALSO

Games Played On High School and Rohm & Haas Fields

ORIOLA ON MOUND

Hurls Team To A Shutout Victory Over Sixth Ward Boys

Franklin A. C. and Third Ward, the highly favored teams of the Bristol Youth League, won their games played yesterday afternoon. Franklin whitewashed the Stanton nine, 6-0, and Third Ward was a one-run victor over the Fourth Ward, 7-6. The games were played on the high school and Rohm and Haas fields, respectively.

"Toby" Oriola hurled the Franklin team to its shutout victory as he held the sixth ward boys to two hits and fanned seven. He did not issue a pass. On the hitting end, Johnson and Scancelli led the Franklin batsmen with two hits each. Scancelli's hits both being doubles. Of the nine hits made off "Norm" Hetherington, four were for extra bases.

Umpire Mike DeRisi had a little difficulty with Capriotti, the Stanton second-sacker, and promptly ejected him from the game.

Two runs in their last turn at bat gave the Third Ward team its triumph. The Fourth Ward boys had taken the lead by scoring twice in the fifth and seemed headed for a surprise win until the Third Warders opened up with their big guns to score twice, the winning run crossing with two out. A double by Stevenson, a stolen base, and a long fly by McDewitt tallied the winning marker.

BRISTOL A. A. WINS; DEFEATS ROEBLING

Bristol A. A. slaughtered the Roebling A. A. nine at Roebling, N. J., yesterday, winning by the score of 16 to 1. The Jersey club was outclassed from the start. Only the good fielding of the Jersey outfielders held down the score to 16 runs.

Lennie Heisler was on the hill for Mulholland's crew and he simply played with the wire twisters, holding them down to 3 hits. Heisler was relieved by Harry Bauroth in the 8th inning who showed the fans a pretty good hook on his curve ball giving the Jersey boys one hit in the last two innings. The 7th inning sent the home fans talking to themselves. The A. A. scored 10 runs on clean hitting and clever base running. 15 batters went to bat in this inning. Palumbo homered in the first inning with one man on the bases.

Her Flight From Death Recounted by Fearless Nun

points out that 20 Marist priests, 8 Marist Brothers and 24 Sisters of the Society of Mary were bringing the word of God to the natives in the Solomon, mostly on the islands of Guadalcanal, Malaita and San Cristoval last August when the Japs struck.

The islands originally were visited by missionaries in 1845 but cannibals murdered a bishop, two priests and one brother, causing Rome to wait until 1898 before sending more missionaries to the area. For six years they worked.

"Some would call those years a waste of time," wrote Sister Theresa, "but very slowly God's grace was working wonders among the man eaters. Only, like most or all of the tribes, the women, not considered nor treated as humans, were rarely seen near the missionary house. The solution to this problem was Sisters.

"In 1904 the first Sisters arrived and slowly the flock began to grow. Unfortunately malaria, black water fever, dysentery and the sea itself claimed victims among the missionaries."

The cannibals gradually accepted the Sisters and the sight of native children accepting the teachings of the nuns apparently impressed them, for they ceased to bother the missionaries and subsequently accepted them.

(Sister Mary Theresa arrived on Guadalcanal, one of 12 missions messenger boy who came with the all-clear message.

"July 3—Another visit. Ishemoto, major officer, accompanied by one soldier. Ishemoto accepts invitation meal while companion investigates surroundings, bayonet in hand. They visit quite politely, even though all trunks, cases were searched. The officer asked for names, nationality, age, etc., of all missionaries in Solomons. Questions such as: 'Are there many Australians left in island? Any hidden in bush? Where?'

"His mean face and fierce eyes seemed to say: 'I don't believe you!' He spoke English very well.

"When leaving 4 p. m., he said Father Brugmans was to go with him. Bishop Aubin protested. 'Useless,' the officer answered curtly. 'I had orders to take you all.' He had intended to take the Bishop, it developed, but politics advised him to take the pro-vice instead; the taking of the Bishop would have aroused the natives' anger and he needed the Bishop's help to get in contact with the natives.

"They left with the promise of returning the prisoner within three days. Same day at 5 p. m. another sampan arrived with wire-less set, frigidaire, chairs, live chickens, cases of merchandise, rifles, used to kill cattle. The boat crew ran wild from house to house, stealing all they could. Monsignor protested so the Jap officer forbade the crew to enter houses.

"On promised day Father Brugmans returned. No ill-treatment, poor food, the ground for a bed, sleeping between two Jap officers who had cots. Same day we are forbidden to leave mission property. Our mission is our internment camp.

"During July the Japs came at least 29 times; they never went away with empty hands. The last days of July and first weeks of August, no Japs. We heard the daily bombings of Lunga airbase. When ammunition blew up the ground shook."

FASHION PARADE

By Milo Anderson
(Famous Hollywood Stylist Writing For International News Service)
HOLLYWOOD—(INS)—Out of victory garden work clothes and established in the Solomons, in 1932.)

The following are excerpts from her diary:

"Rumors of war with Germany did not alter the daily routine in the Solomons in 1939-1940. In June 1941 the word 'evacuation' and its meaning was beginning to be pronounced quite often by government officials.

"In December—the Japs' Pearl Harbor attack—evacuation of all women and children (not very numerous) from Tulagi and surrounding islands.

"January—First bombs dropped on Tulagi—evacuation of island. The last evacuees came through our mission, Cape Esperance, on Jan. 26. A sad group leaving all behind—many were from England.

"That night we thanked God most heartily for the privilege of staying amongst our natives. We ignored the future. Every day talk about the Japs coming nearer and nearer. Every day Jap planes passed very high and we heard the bombs drop more numerous each time.

"Fatal day, Saturday, May 2, about 5 p. m. Japs arrived at Tulagi, just walked in.

"May 4—Attack by Americans. Beginning of Coral Sea battle. Three Jap ships sunk on other side of Savo Island, a fourth thrown on Bucotio reefs and others in Tulagi surroundings.

"Rest of May and June went by without seeing a Jap. In June they began the famous Henderson Field; we knew they would soon come to see us. They asked the natives for information concerning the missionaries; to make natives more confident in them some said they were Catholics. It was not true.

"July 2—A black sampan arrived at 2:30 p. m. Nine men, small cannons, machine guns and ammunition on board. Father Brugmans, Dutch priest in charge of our Visale mission, and pro-vice of Bishop Aubin, decided I should leave with all the girls to avoid meeting the Japs. Following a small, hidden path, Indian file we left for the bush.

"The Japanese bandits, ex-convicts, we were told by Jap officer, went through the grounds, even getting on their knees to look under houses. They called for fowl, fruits, a pig which a missionary had to roast for them and other things. All this was done according to their orders.

"The Missionary Fathers had on their socks to make them realize the sanctity of their state. These Japs made a lengthy visit from 2:20 p. m. to 8:30 a. m., so Father Brugmans unbathed his son-tane and put his hand in his trousers pocket. Quick as lightning one Jap caught his hand and he was searched. They thought he had a revolver.

"During this time a native was sent to tell the Sisters and children to find shelter; impossible to return to mission. Not encouraging words. A large group girls, no shelter, no clothes, no food, darkness coming on, and to make it worse it started to rain. Walked an hour to abandoned native house in bush. After sleepless night, one of fervent prayers, we welcomed a into inspired play clothes went Ann Sheridan's victory garden guests last week-end, after an all morning bout with the flora of San Fernando Valley.

Ida Lupino, soon to be seen in "Thank Your Lucky Stars," wore a peasant-type outfit inspired by the paintings of Degas. The low cut blouse of white cotton featured fantastically puffed sleeves and vividly hand-painted flowers. Neckline and sleeves were bound with eyelet embroidery run through with black velvet ribbons. The dirndl skirt was of black pique with slot pockets edged with white rickrack. Black ballet slippers were the perfect shoe accompaniment.

The hostess, Miss Sheridan, wore a long-sleeved blouse of white rayon crepe with hand-painted ballerinas spattered over it. Open throat and ruffled epaulets were a different note. Black spun rayon slacks with nipped-in cuffs were also dance-inspired.

Lucille Ball was chic in a very brown dirndl bound in green, red and white peasant tape. A high-necked, short-sleeved white batiste blouse featured rows of horizontal hand-tucking and minute ruffles. Over this the actress wore a red felt vest with front lacing. A red felt baby cap topped the outfit.

Again the peasant—Jill Bishop, currently seen in "Action in the North Atlantic," appeared in a kelly green spun rayon peasant jumper, with unique design in red and white braid. A green-and-white dotted Swiss blouse had a ruffled ruff at the throat.

Mr. Guido Cagnetti, Chestnut street, gave his daughter in marriage. She is the niece of Mr. and Mrs. Guido Trasatti, Lincoln avenue, with whom she made her home. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Sabitine Caucei.

A trio of young women were in the bridal party, namely Miss Rose Marie Rutolo, Penn street, and Miss Gloria Trasatti, Lincoln avenue, a cousin of the bride, who served as bridesmaids; and Miss Barbara Virgulti, Conshohocken, the maid of honor.

The Rev. Fr. Peter Pinci officiated.

The best man was Mr. Paul Caucei, brother of the groom. Serving as usher was Mr. John DiAngelo, of Brook street.

Mr. Joseph Galzerano, Jefferson avenue, provided vocal numbers.

A handsome gown of white net was worn by the bride. Clusters of orange blossoms appeared at either side of the neck-line, and long sleeves ended in points over the hands. Ruffles formed a cap on the sleeves near the shoulders. The full skirt had trim of double ruffles arranged in large circles, the skirt sweeping to a graceful train. Her long veil of net was held in place by an orange blossom tiara. Slippers were of white satin. As she entered the church she carried a white prayer book from which were suspended white rosebuds on ribbons. This was exchanged for a bouquet of roses, gypsophelia and orchids for the recessional.

Miss Rutolo was attired in pink; Miss Trasatti in yellow; and Miss Virgulti in blue. The net gowns had V necklines edged with narrow double ruffles of self material, and sleeves were bracelet length. Shirling enhanced the bodices, and three double ruffles appeared on the skirts, these forming three V's at the back. Their hats of net had trim of flowers, and streamers extended down their backs. The hats matched the individual gowns. Each maid carried mixed flowers and wore silver slippers.

At the Caucei home, immediately following the ceremony a breakfast was served. Dinner was arranged for the afternoon at the Lido Venice, Andalusia; and the evening reception took place in Mutual Aid Hall.

For a week's journey to New York City the former Miss Cagnetti selected a poudre blue two-piece silk suit with blue satin ribbon trim. Her hat was of white silk crepe, and other accessories were of white. Her corsage was composed of orchids. The newlyweds' home will be in an apartment at 307 New Brook street.

this problem way back in 1926. For 12 years, in the laboratories of Rohm & Haas Company, they concocted lethal brews for insects, but their efforts received scant attention from growers as long as rotenone was plentiful. But these chemists continued work till finally, in 1938, they perfected an insecticide promising enough to try out on peas, beans and other vegetables.

For years growers and agricultural authorities held firmly to the belief that you couldn't kill pea aphids and cabbage loopers, bean beetles and other insects by using insect dusts containing any less than 3/4% to 1% rotenone. Yet, in 1938, experimenters at the Rohm & Haas farm in Bristol, found that by adding this new laboratory-made insecticide, a thiocyanate known as Lethane, they could get as effective a dust with only half the amount of rotenone normally used in dusts. For instance, on the Mexican bean beetle, whose taste for beans has carried him to nearly every state where beans grow, addition of 2% Lethane halved the amount of rotenone needed, with results as shown in table below:

Composition	Lbs. of dust per acre	No. of insects killed per 100
1.0% rotenone	30	91
0.4% rotenone
2.0% Lethane 60	30	94

Tests on these and other insect pests on various vegetable crops were then extended to experimental stations throughout the country, with essentially the same results.

These findings spell success for farmers in making scarce supplies of rotenone go twice as far. Actually, the incorporation of Lethane in insecticide dusts can replace about 3,000,000 pounds of rotenone roots, making up for that much of the deficit in imports.

Thus is American research helping to remove serious threats to a full vegetable basket in 1943.
